WOLFE ALWAYS CRACKS THE CASE!

ENQUIRER PLUS INTERVIEW

BRIAN WOLFE is a seasoned pro when it comes to private investigating, having been in the business for 25 years. He talked to The National ENQUIRER in an exclusive interview about his show "Cry Wolfe," which airs on Investigation Discovery. On the show he reenacts some of the juiciest cases from throughout his career - from exposing cheating spouses and scammers to finding lost children and solving homicides.

Each episode has Wolfe leading investigations the old-fashioned way, doing extensive background checks, using elaborate disguises and hidden cameras - even digging through the trash! His partner, Janine McCarthy, has a talent for sifting through online "paper" trails. Cameras follow Wolfe and McCarthy from the initial consultation to the inevitable confrontation as they gather evidence against their target. Each episode ends with a heated confrontation, resolution for the client, and update cards letting viewers know the current status of the situation.

Infidelity is the primary reason many clients have sought Wolfe's services recently.

"I hate to give percentages out," he said. "If you think your partner is doing something, there's probably something up."

He says people don't usually confront the spouses themselves for fear of being told - and convinced - they are just being paranoid.

"To commit adultery is a strong thing to do. Once the cheater gets caught, everybody suffers," Wolfe said. "It's easy to forgive but it's hard to forget. Marriage problems are important to me. When you say 'I do,' it should be to the end. If you can't handle it anymore, get separated."

The most devastating case in Wolfe's portfolio concerned a female cancer patient deceived by a man in a support group who claimed he also had cancer. He swept her off her feet - but it turned out he was a con artist who wanted sex and to get hold of her assets - and she wasn't his first victim.

"I wanted to punch him right in the face," recounts Wolfe. "There are men and women like that everywhere who victimize people just for their own financial gain."

About this week's episode, Wolfe says while you should "Love thy neighbor, you should not literally 'love thy neighbor.'"

This case involved threats to Wolfe's life when he uncovered the betrayal. It wouldn't be the first time he put himself in danger.

Wolfe works in very dangerous and impoverished areas. He's been stabbed in the neck and threatened at gunpoint. But as he's grown older, he says, "I'm not fearless anymore. I used to be silly and stick it up to the kids. I'm still big and strong, but the older you get, you just drive away."

There's times that I've done some criminal cases where I'm concerned that some people want to physically hurt me."
